Summary of Information

The large, moving metal objects previously reported seem to be land vehicles of some sort. There is a perception of a large, extremely noisy vehicle going through a narrow space between two extensive vertical areas suggestive of structures or walls. The noise is very loud, with a steady roar/clatter, as well as a high-pitched whining sound, very much reminiscent of a turbine. There is a sense of the vehicle being in an enclosing, constricted space, following a winding, circuitous sort of a path among the vertical surfaces. People associated with at least one of these vehicles are all male, cynical, mean-spirited, and not particularly interested in anything by their own best-interests. At least two categories of people are present at the site: those associated with the vehicles, and those who aren't. Those that aren't feel put upon and resentful about the presence of the vehicles. The group of structures/village does not necessarily seem to be a goal or objective for the vehicles, but at least one of them enters the built-up area. There is a sense of damage being done, as one of the vehicles noses into a standing structure and crumbles a wall.
